Course Description

Aims

The course aims to explain what we mean by Multilingualism, since it is a term which is used both to describe a place where many languages are spoken as well as a person who speaks a number of languages. It will give examples of a number of multilingual policies and show how these reflect broader values in society, in Europe and also more widely. It will also will describe the various types of language policy which have been developed in response to an increasingly multilingual world and summarise what their effects have been.

We will also consider the value of people speaking a range of languages, and also the challenges that this poses not least for education system, looking at examples in a number of countries

Outcomes

After following this module you will be able to
